Welcome to the City of
Walnut Creek Open Space

In 2007, the Parks and Recreation Department of the City of Walnut Creek undertook a planning process to identify and prioritize potential open space areas for preservation. The process included public input, stakeholder engagement, and a comprehensive analysis of existing and potential open space areas. The result was the development of a comprehensive Open Space Plan (OSP) that outlines the strategy for preserving and enhancing open space assets within the city.

The Open Space Plan identifies a variety of open space areas that are important for the environmental, recreational, and aesthetic values of the community. These areas include natural ecosystems, wetlands, beaches, and agricultural lands. The plan also outlines strategies for acquisition, protection, and management of these resources.

Walnut Creek Open Space includes a diverse range of natural and recreational areas, offering opportunities for hiking, cycling, nature study, and community events. The city is committed to preserving these resources for current and future generations.

For more information on Walnut Creek Open Space and related projects, please visit the City of Walnut Creek’s official website or contact the Parks and Recreation Department.

[Map showing different open space areas in Walnut Creek]