Council moves ahead with library project

Saying it “is the most important thing” for Walnut Creek, the City Council voted Feb. 27 to move forward without delay on building a new downtown library.

The Council voted 4-1 at a special community meeting to proceed with developing the new library, to approve a new site plan (see back page) that has been revised to reflect community sentiment, and to authorize City Manager Mike Parness to continue development of plans for the project with the architect.

The meeting, attended by more than 250 people at Las Lomas High School, concluded a two-month community outreach program to gather additional input in the wake of the November bond measure election results.

Although 61.5 percent of Walnut Creek voters supported Measure R, the City’s library bond plan, it fell short of the required two-thirds majority for passage.

Buying in WC is a good investment in community

It’s no secret that Walnut Creek is one of the most economically potent cities in the Bay Area. With its impressive mix of retail stores, restaurants, theaters, and automobile dealerships, Walnut Creek is the shopping hub of the region.

Which is all the more reason why Walnut Creek residents should spend their dollars in their own town, according to City Manager Mike Parness.

“It’s a good investment,” said Parness. “That’s because sales tax revenue accounts for the largest single source of income for the City. When residents buy their goods and services in Walnut Creek, part of that sales tax remains in their community to pay for a wide range of programs, services, and amenities, from police officers to arts programs.”

In fact, sales tax revenue accounts for 36 percent of the City’s overall income, or more than $20 million a year. Of that amount, 39 percent is generated by general retail sales (stores) and 25 percent comes from auto sales.

Although Walnut Creek has 36 new and used auto dealerships, recent industry statistics show that only 50 percent of Walnut Creek residents who purchased a vehicle actually bought it in Walnut Creek. And that hurts.

Because automobiles, trucks and SUVs are the most expensive items people buy on a regular basis, the loss of sales tax revenues to other cities takes a big bite out of how much Walnut Creek can spend on local services and programs.

For instance, it is estimated that if the other 50 percent of residents bought their vehicles in Walnut Creek, it would generate over $600,000 annually in sales tax, which is the equivalent of the cost of about five police officers.

Walnut Creek has a long tradition of providing the highest quality of life for its residents, and sales tax revenue is the fuel that makes that tradition go. City leaders hope residents consider that the next time they need to buy a vehicle, because the dollars they spend here can and does make a big difference to their way of life.

Spanish village of Olvera sought as Walnut Creek’s next ‘sister city’

Walnut Creek’s sister city group is hoping to adopt a small hillside village in the south of Spain as Walnut Creek’s third sister city.

Olvera, a town of 9,000 inhabitants located about 65 miles inland from the Mediterranean coast and just southeast of Seville, has been invited to enter into a sister city relationship with Walnut Creek, according to Karen Cassano, president of Walnut Creek Sister Cities International.

“I’m really excited about this,” said Cassano, who has sent a signed cooperative agreement in English and Spanish to Olvera’s Mayor Francisco Parraga Rodriguez. “We’ve been wanting to have a Spanish city.”

Walnut Creek’s sister city program was launched in 1986 when the City adopted Noceto, Italy to forge a cultural exchange between residents of the two communities. In 1991, the resort community of Siófok, Hungary became the second sister city.

Mayor Rodriguez visited Walnut Creek in 2005 and said he would be interested in exploring a cultural exchange with our community, said Cassano.

Walnut Creek Sister Cities International, formed in 1986 and numbering 60 active members, is planning a trip to Olvera in May 2007 to meet with Mayor Rodriguez and activate the relationship.

Anyone interested in joining Walnut Creek Sister Cities International or in the Spain trip may contact Cassano at kbcassa@astound.net.

When President Gerald R. Ford dropped in at Broadway Plaza to dedicate a replica of the Liberty Bell, real history was being made.

For the only time in Walnut Creek’s history, a sitting U.S. president visited the city on May 25, 1976 in a pre-Memorial Day ceremony attended by thousands.

President Ford greeted the large crowd in shirt sleeves and proceeded to ring the small bell, only to have the clapper break off in his hand after two rings. The crowd loved it, though, and everyone — including the befuddled Chief Executive — roared with delight.

The Liberty Bell replica had been donated to the City by Soroptimist International Walnut Creek in an American Independence Bicentennial salute to all those men and women who gave their lives for their country.

The Liberty Bell is on display at Liberty Bell Plaza, located at the corner of Broadway and Mt. Diablo Boulevard.

Other presidents who have visited Walnut Creek either before or after their terms of office were Richard Nixon, Ronald Reagan, and Herbert Hoover.

Recycling bins to appear in parks

The City is working with the East Bay Conservation Corps to install 15 containers at Larkey Park and 16 containers at Civic Park.
Southern Pacific train service to Walnut Creek may have ended decades ago, but there is still more than 65 “miles” of railroad track in town that still reverberates with the sounds of locomotives.

Those tracks belong to the Walnut Creek Model Railroad Society, a band of 60 hobbyists who have built their own “HO Heaven” in a 5,000-square-foot building next to Larkey Park.

It houses the “Diablo Valley Lines” — one of the largest and most delicately crafted model railroads in the U.S., which has brought the club worldwide notoriety.

The City has leased the property to the Society since 1972 so it could rebuild a permanent home for an 1,800-square-foot layout that has more than 4,300 feet of laid track on over 175,000 individual ties and more than 340 turnouts.

The Diablo Valley Lines is modeled after typical sections of the Sierra Nevada railroads and composite towns and countryside in the western states.

The club, formed in 1946, had its layout in a building adjacent to the Walnut Creek train depot, built by Southern Pacific in 1891. The building was moved in 1972 and converted into a restaurant (today’s Vic Stewart Steakhouse), so the club moved its operations into the City’s building.

“When we searched for a new location, the City generously offered us a corner of Larkey Park to rebuild,” said longtime club member Gordon Laughland.

The club opened the new Diablo Valley Lines in 1974 and it has since become an international stop for model train buffs.

The trains, which belong to individual club members, include nostalgic steam locomotives, and modern diesels.

The public is invited to view the trains in action the last Friday evening of each month from 8 to 10 p.m. Tickets are $2, adults; $1, seniors and children ages 6-12; free, children under 6.

Special train shows are scheduled on Saturday, May 20 and Sunday, May 21, 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. The popular Holiday Shows will be held Nov. 17-19 and Nov. 24-26.

Historic preservation rules group formed

The City Council on March 21 appointed seven individuals to serve on the City’s Historic Preservation Ordinance Drafting Committee.

The committee comprises Roger Miller and Paul Cianfichi of the Walnut Creek Historical Society; Brian Hirahara and Mike Reed of the Walnut Creek Downtown Business Association; and at-large members Marc Herbert, Sally Ingraham, and Craig Lazzarosci.

The committee met for the first time on March 29 and is expected to complete a draft ordinance by July for review by the Design Review and Planning commissions and the City Council.

The group’s task is to work with City staff to develop guidelines and draft a new ordinance that will govern how various historic buildings and sites within Walnut Creek are to be preserved. The General Plan currently lists 37 potential historic resources in Walnut Creek.

Traffic Collision.

Period of Impatience Can Really Add Up in Accident Times, Traffic School, and a Brief Summary of the Possible Premium Increases in Insurance for a Red Light Violation Is $351. Add to That the Possible Premium Increases in Insurance, Money Lost for Court Appearance Times, Traffic School, and a Brief Period of Impatience Can Really Add Up in Costs.

And Hopefully You Didn't Cause a Traffic Collision.

Red Light Running Is Costly

You're in Your Car Running Late. You Come Up to an Intersection as the Light Turns Yellow. You Think "I Can Make It" So You Speed Up. You Get Through the Intersection, But Look into the Mirror and See the Red and Blue Lights of a Police Vehicle. The Officer Steps Up and Tells You That the Reason You Were Stopped Is Because You Ran a Red Light.

wait a Minute, You Say, the Light Was Yellow.

The Officer Takes Your License and Registration and Comes Back with a Citation.

California Vehicle Code Section 21453(a) States: A Driver Facing a Red Light Shall Stop at the Limit Line.

Officers Enforce This Section in a Number of Ways. One Is to Park Just Off the Intersection in a Place Where They Can See the Limit Line, and the Signal. The Officer Watches the Light Turn Red, Then Looks at the Limit Line and Any Cars Approaching It. Any Vehicle That Crosses the Line After the Light Turned Red Is in Violation.

The Officer's Perspective in This Instance Is from Standing Still. The Driver's Perspective Is from a Moving Vehicle. Usually the Last Light the Driver Saw Was Yellow. Then They Look to Where They Are Driving, Not Realizing Where Their Vehicle Was in Relation to the Limit Line as the Light Turned Red.

The Length of a Yellow Light Is Usually Between 3 and 4 Seconds. If You Are Traveling Anywhere Close to the Speed Limit, That Is More Than Enough Time to Stop for a Changing Light.

Now the Bad News. The Minimum Fine for a Red Light Violation Is $351. Add to That the Possible Premium Increases in Insurance, Money Lost for Court Appearance Times, Traffic School, and a Brief Period of Impatience Can Really Add Up in Costs.

And Hopefully You Didn't Cause a Traffic Collision.

General Plan

Community members influenced the General Plan process in other ways by requesting that it include goals such as:
• Stronger policies for the continued protection of neighborhoods from traffic intrusion
• Better public access to creeks
• Special trail needs for equestrians
• More support for open space and park preservation and expansion
• Buffering the historic Almond-Shuey neighborhood from commercial areas
• Incorporating a long-term arts vision
• Preserving the character of the traditional downtown

The General Plan continues the City’s commercial growth management program that meters new growth at 75,000-square-feet a year. (The Shadelands Business Park is exempted from metering as a way to develop more quality jobs in the city.)

Another major theme is to bring new housing into the core area, where there is ready access to the freeways, BART, and community services.

The plan also recognizes that the City will need to step up its efforts to improve transportation alternatives and walkability to deal with worsening traffic congestion.

The new downtown library will be built on the site of the existing library.
